The Donald P. Shiley School of Engineering at the University of Portland invites applications for 2 full-time, non-tenure-track, 9-month teaching positions. The selected candidates will teach the equivalent of 18 to 24 semester-hours per year (depending on rank) and advise undergraduate engineering students. At this time, one position is funded for 2.5 years starting in January 2016 and the other for 3 years starting in August 2015 (the start date and length of time depend on the finalists and are not fixed by discipline). The 2 positions are as follows:

Engineering: The successful candidate is expected to primarily teach first-year and sophomore-level engineering mechanics courses such as statics, strengths of materials, dynamics, and introduction to engineering. Other possible courses include analysis of engineering data, fluid mechanics, engineering economics, materials science, circuits, graphics, introduction to computing with MATLAB, and mechanics/materials laboratories.

Computer Science: The successful candidate is expected to primarily teach first- and second-year computing courses and laboratories such as introductory programming in Java, object-oriented design, and data structures. There may be opportunities to teach courses such as graphics, operating systems, introduction to engineering, introduction to computing with MATLAB, and/or to develop upper-division courses in security, programming languages, databases, parallel programming, or other topics based on expertise.

These are ideal positions for someone who wants to gain more teaching experience and/or wants to explore teaching at a student-centered institution that values excellent pedagogy. Faculty development and mentoring opportunities will be provided. The Donald P. Shiley School of Engineering emphasizes undergraduate education with an enrollment of approximately 700 across four majors: civil, mechanical, and electrical engineering, and computer science. Visit http://engineering.up.edu/ for more information about the Shiley School.

The instructor position requires a minimum of a Master's degree in a relevant discipline. Candidates with a Ph.D. will be considered for the visiting faculty rank. Interested applicants should submit the following materials: a) Letter of interest discussing teaching philosophy, b) Curriculum vitae, and c) Contact information for at least three references. The priority deadline for submitting applications is May 15th though applications will continue to be accepted until the positions are filled. Review will begin immediately. Only electronic applications will be considered. A background investigation check is required before final hiring can be completed. The selected candidate must be legally authorized to work in the United States and not require sponsorship.
